

Created in September 2007 with its office in Brussels, Carnegie Europe is the crossroads for the work of the Carnegie Endowment's centres in Washington D.C., Moscow, Beijing and Beirut. It brings a unique non-European perspective on the most daunting foreign policy challenges faced by Europe, including the rise of China and India, a re-emergent Russia, democracy in the Middle East, and U.S. foreign policy. Carnegie Europe engages with foreign policy makers, commentators and experts through public events, debate forums and private consultations across Europe. It aims to bring a stronger European dimension to the Carnegie Endowment's New Vision to become the first truly global think-tank.

Kagan and Carothers on U.S. foreign policy, London

US Foreign Policy and Global Security Challenges

Leading foreign policy experts Robert Kagan and Tom Carothers spoke in London at a Carnegie Europe debate moderated by Gideon Rachman from the Financial Times on what should the world expect from America after Bush. Carnegie also hosted the Brussels launch of Robert Kagan's new bestseller "The Return of History and the End of Dreams" with NATO Head of Policy Planning Jamie Shea. Carnegie Europe's New Vision conference will continue to identify the challenges ahead and the prospects for changes in the future U.S. foreign policy.

Grare and Tellis on Pakistan and the West, London

Transatlantic Afghanistan Initiative

The Transatlantic Afghanistan Initiative is aimed at broadening the debate on both sides of the Atlantic through meetings and policy research with the combined resources of the Carnegie Endowment in Washington D.C. and Brussels. On the eve of the Paris Donors conference, Carnegie Europe hosted The Afghanistan Debate Forum with top experts Barnett Rubin, Ali Jalali and many others to have a critical discussion on the most urgent problems Afghanistan faces today. Other notable events included a seminar on Western strategy towards Pakistan in London, with Carnegie experts Ashley Tellis and Frédéric Grare co-hosted with RUSI.

Trenin on Reading Russia Right, Brussels

Rising Powers: China and India, and Re-Emergent Russia

With the return of Russia, Carnegie Europe hosted a high profile conference on a new strategy for engagement between Russia, the U.S. and Europe. Notable speakers included former Russian Prime Minister Mikhail Kasyanov, Senator William Bradley and Hubert Védrine. To continue the focus on rising powers India and China and re-emergent Russia, Carnegie Europe is hosting a series of luncheon briefings bringing Carnegie's top China and Russia experts together with policy officials, scholars and media.

Paul Salem on the New Middle East, Berlin

The New Middle East

The Middle East remains a politically and strategically volatile region. In a series of presentations on the New Middle East in Paris, Brussels, London and Berlin, Carnegie has brought to Europe the in-depth insights of Carnegie's renowned Middle East analysts Amr Hamzawy, Marina Ottaway and Paul Salem from Washington D.C. and Beirut. Carnegie Europe and the Carnegie Middle East Centre in Beirut will co-host a series of meetings on the emergence of new foreign policy and economic actors in the Middle East in 2008/09.

Carnegie Europe will be inaugurated on 2 – 3 October, 2008 in Brussels with its New Vision Conference 'Post-Bush America and the world: can the gap be closed?'
